But in governments like ours--a government of the people--the government as a power has no business intermeddling in these things. The work lies with the people as the fountain of power. Purify the fountain and the stream will necessarily be pure. Honest employment and honest industry, mental and physical, are individual duties that ought to be observed at home, but if the people ignore moral suasion and choose deceptive schemes, and resort to illusory practices to avoid honest work, their government will naturally run in the channel of irresponsibility. We are perhaps more largely indebted to the honest employment and persistent industry, or in common parlance the unrewarded honest toil of working men and...
