Excerpt: . . . to the other end of the cabinet, but looks back towards Ulrich, who, with hands outstretched towards her, remains where he stood. Oh, God, did I aught say I nothing said. No, nothing said! Do you hear--and yet--Transported by her affection. Yes--yes--I did say! Take wings, My girlish prudery, unworthy simulation! Is he a man like others Why should that Ashame me that with pride my breast does fill What can on earth a woman greater do Than him to love--Ist not as though my own All that in you is great and noble, all You have achieved and are, I made in your souls high Flight took a share and shared your mighty deeds, If I love you-- When love ennobles and upraises us--. Why not with gladness, like To a devotion freely yield to it Yet who am I to dare to...
