The dresses of the married women is the same as that of the girls, only better worked. They wear trousers; and, instead of lockings, wrap their legs in linen rags; their shoes are made of the bark of trees, cut into strips, and matted. In the summer season they wear nothing over their shift; which is not put into the trousers, but hangs over them all round. This shift is close to the neck and the wrists, cut into shape, and comes down to the knees. The neck, the wristbands, and all the seams, are covered with whimsical embroidery of different-coloured wools; a large buckle holds it together at the bottom, and a girdle round the waist. When they would be more dressed than ordinary, they put over this shift a habit like a morning gown, made of...
