The above startling sentence was uttered in a thrilling, impressive manner by a fierce-looking man, attired in the faded uniform of a Confederate officer. This man was Captain Halroy, who, at the head of a small party of Tennesseans, had just made a midnight attack upon the cabin of Fred Merrigold, a young man noted for his avowed Union principles, whom it was their determination to force into the rebel ranks. He had until recently lived in the village of Glenwood, near the Kentucky river, but when his sentiments became known, they evoked the displeasure of the intensely Southern element which there prevailed, and as a result, he was obliged to flee to the mountains. Taken thus suddenly and at a great disadvantage, the young Unionist, quite bewildered and unable to offer any adequate resistance, said nothing, but allowed himself to be dragged rudely away from his humble retreat...
